

Gas Industry Unsafe Situations Procedure

These procedures are published in GSGS0111 and are evolved through GSGS systems. These provide guidance on what to do and what actions need to be taken to protect the end property. They are updated from time to time and engineers should check they have the correct version.

The GSGS states that installations that are immediately Dangerous (ID) should be:

- Repaired or made safe
- Isolated to the responsible person and with permission of the responsible person, disconnected

Certain unsafe situations must be reported under Reports of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations (RIDDOR).

Immediately Dangerous (ID)

An installation which if used WILL constitute a danger to life or property, in these cases the installation MUST be repaired or made safe by the gas engineer or the gas supplier. Making safe effectively means putting the appliance or installation beyond use by physical disconnection.

However, with the exception of the gas supplier, who has responsibilities defined in the GSGS (see Section 2), the only person with the legal ability to allow disconnection is the Responsible Person for the premises. If the responsible person refuses to allow disconnection, the gas engineer must advise the gas supplier, who must then take action to make the installation safe.

Examples of ID situations

- Gas escapes
- Smell of gas or fumes
- Appliances falling or lightning risk
- Signs of leakage of products of combustion (POC)
- Spillage or leakage of POC to the building
- Safety devices not operating or made inoperative
- Open vent on gas appliance
- Undesired operation that is affecting safe operation of the appliance

Report of the GSGS engineer, the gas engineer will complete a warning notice, which is left to the responsible person and also obtain a warning label to the installation (see also section 4.1 of this manual).

At Risk (AR)

An installation which if used WILL constitute a risk to life and property, in these cases the installation should be made safe by turning off of the responsible person agreed.

However, if the customer does not agree, the responsible person takes responsibility. The gas engineer will seek confirmation to this effect by obtaining a signature from the responsible person and warning notice paperwork.

Examples of At Risk situations

- Flare or leaks gas means of inspection
- Emergency Control System (ECS) not working correctly (in a non-emergency situation)
- No or insufficient ventilation to support fixed or business appliance (provided) appliance is operating safely
- Gases with by screen or are unstable
- Incomplete or damaged flue system
- Corroded or damaged gas pipework

NOTE: This does not a list of situations

As part of the ID procedures for the type of defects listed above, the gas engineer must complete a warning notice, which is left with the responsible person and also obtain a warning label to the installation (see also section 4.1 of this manual).

However, if the customer does not agree, the responsible person takes responsibility. The gas engineer will seek confirmation to this effect by obtaining a signature from the responsible person and warning notice paperwork.
