Problems is a workbook intended for students in 3rd grade and above that need more practice with word problems. It especially aims to help students in 4th-7th grades who have trouble with word problems and who need to go back to the beginning so to speak to learn to solve them. The problems are generally based on a knowledge of third grade math such as regrouping in addition and subtraction, the multiplication tables, concept of division and calculating change. The problems do not require long multiplication, long division or calculations with fractions or decimals with the exception of money amounts. The worksheets have examples and some instruction about common strategies for word problems. Students are often encouraged to write down the calculations they do. They are also encouraged to make a drawing or a sketch of the situation in the problem to help them understand the situation and to see what math operation is involved. Overall, most of the problems require two or more steps; however, some problem sets focus on differentiating what math operation should be used and those only require a single step. Several problem sets are designed to help students to master problems that involve equal size groups. These questions either ask for the total and are thus solved by multiplying or they ask for the size of the group or for the quantity of the groups; one can write a missing number multiplication sentence such as $3 \times \underline{\quad} = 18$ or use division. The book also includes word problems with fractions, with large numbers, with money, geometry word problems and challenges in the form of puzzle corners. "How Would You Solve It?" Krystle Briese, 2009. Research Question: How does collaborating daily to solve math word problems on number theory and fractions using scaffolded strategies to support reading comprehension and math concept development influence performance on word problems? Subquestions: Does the protocol for problem analysis help solve or apply to all word problems? How successful are the English Learners (ELs) compared to the English Only (EOs) students in this study in applying the protocol and in showing growth? Research Activities: Context: This study took place in a 5th grade classroom with 26 students, 13 English learners in a highly diverse large school district. This study focuses on six students across English learning levels, performance in mathematics with two at each the low, medium and high level of mathematics. Methods and Data: This intervention occurred over a twenty-one day period and consisted of three five-day lesson cycles in which students worked in groups of 3 to discuss and complete mathematical word problems. Each five-day lesson cycle was followed on the sixth day by a quiz and the seventh day by one-third of a chapter test. Groups and word problems were designed to allow for discussion and collaboration to find solutions and later independent success on quizzes and exams. Results: Student attitudes of themselves as successful mathematical word problem solvers improved by 33% as did their confidence in the ability to solve them. Student performance on word problems in mathematics quizzes and tests improved and students used more grade-level appropriate academic vocabulary when discussing mathematics. Additionally, students who were English Learners participated in group discussions including adding their own methods for solving and giving

feedback to their peers
 Conclusions Having students work collaboratively to solve word problems can be beneficial to student problem solving abilities and or their confidence in mathematics It is also one way for students to share and discuss methods for problem solving and give English Learners more opportunities for speaking practice
