7 pages | 1504 words

My background and function in the interview was to determine what it takes to be an efficient leader. The main problem to understand before carrying out an interview with any topic is to ask oneself these following questions. They consist of, who is this subject? What does he or she do? How does she or he work and what makes them who they are? Asking these questions likewise are very important when one is performing an interview with a leader of a healthcare setting or a company. I as a corrective coordinator in a healthcare setting wished to carry out an interview with a health care leader to comprehend what their function remains in the day-to-day operations of a health organization. I had some objectives, and they consisted of, to discover somebody who contributed to various projects within a health organization, an individual involved with quality improvements, an individual who executes ideas and an individual who is involved with examining different health outcomes. I also wished to interview a person who had enough staff members working under them. After thinking about these objectives, I decided to interview the director of nursing (DON) in my location of employment. This is a girl accountable for most of the clinical operations that occur on an everyday basis in the health care institution. As I carried out the interview, I desired to find out her personal approach of management, and her professional interactions with personnel members including doctors, other health care managers, employee and other auxiliary workers involved in the health care institution. The director of nursing leadership style and some of the major monetary, ethical, scientific, administrative and individual obstacles involved with leadership would be talked about. Lastly, the DON's mentor if any as she desired become a leader and her guidance to me to become an effective leader would also be talked about throughout this paper. Who is a leader? After an informal intro of the factors why I wished to carry out an interview with her as the director of nursing, I asked the primary concern, "Who is a leader"? She mentioned and I paraphrase "a leader is generally a person that does everything. According to Sullivan and Decker (2009), "a leader is a person that uses interpersonal skills to influence others while trying to accomplish a specific goal through means of flexible repertoire of personal behaviors and strategies" (p. 45). A healthcare leader is a person in the health care profession with or without a specific job title, and uses that role as a leader to affect change through various means. I waited for the DON to provide more detailed response of a leader, she stated, "well follow me around for a day and see what I do and this would give you an idea of what a leader does". Those statements by the DON lead me to finding out about the important qualities and characteristics of a leader. Important qualities or characteristics of a leader. I began my day of following the director of nursing, by observing a morning meeting that she leads on a daily basis called "Stand-up"....
