

Hey there, have you ever wondered about house flies? These tiny creatures can be found almost everywhere and are super common. They have big red eyes, six legs, and a pair of transparent wings that help them fly. You might be surprised to learn that they can walk on walls and even on ceilings thanks to their sticky feet!

House flies have a pretty interesting life cycle, you know. They start as tiny eggs, which turn into maggots, then they become pupae, and finally, they grow into adult flies. This whole process only takes about two weeks! But, once they become adults, they only live for about a month.

You might be curious about what house flies eat and how they interact with other insects. Well, they love to munch on our leftovers and other organic materials, making them excellent recyclers! They sometimes compete with other insects like ants and beetles for food. House flies have a special way of eating by vomiting on their food to dissolve it and then sucking it back up, yuck!

Lastly, let's talk about house flies and their relationship with humans. Although they might seem like just a nuisance, house flies can actually carry diseases, so it's important to keep our homes clean to avoid attracting them. But, don't worry, not all flies are bad! Some species of flies, like the hoverfly, are excellent pollinators and help our plants grow.
