EXPERIMENT 1: THE EFFECT OF TEMPERATURE ON THE RATE OF A CHEMICAL REACTION

The purpose of this experiment is to determine the effect of temperature on the rate of a chemical reaction. The reaction studied is the reaction between hydrogen peroxide and potassium iodide. The rate of reaction is measured by the time taken for a certain amount of oxygen gas to be produced. The experiment is carried out at different temperatures and the results are plotted on a graph of time versus temperature. The graph shows that the rate of reaction increases as the temperature increases.

The reaction between hydrogen peroxide and potassium iodide is an exothermic reaction. The rate of reaction is affected by several factors, including temperature, concentration, and the presence of a catalyst. In this experiment, the effect of temperature on the rate of reaction is being studied. The reaction is carried out at different temperatures and the time taken for a certain amount of oxygen gas to be produced is measured. The results are plotted on a graph of time versus temperature.

The graph shows that the rate of reaction increases as the temperature increases. This is because the molecules have more energy at higher temperatures and are therefore more likely to collide and react. The activation energy of the reaction is also affected by temperature. At higher temperatures, the activation energy is lower, which means that the reaction is more likely to occur.
