

process, as he could have kept silent (28:1-4), though no person else can be credited for his own action and based on an act effected in the will of Jeremiah (2:1), so he was probably a denouncer of sinning high priests during David's reign. Jeremiah rebuked Shaphan for a sin because of his support of Josiah's (2 Kings 22:10-11). Thus, Jeremiah was often a vocal voice, served a vocal role, and perhaps also took a physical physical stance. He lived close enough to Jerusalem to understand its people, their worship, and their daily activities. He was far enough removed from Jerusalem that he was not afraid to criticize when he saw something there.

Jeremiah had a difficult life. His message of repentance delivered in the empty wine and oil market (7:1-10; 26:1-11); his warnings placed against him (10:18-23); and his refusal to see Jerusalem in the present of his century (20:1-11; 27:1-11; 36:1-17). He had to witness to men against (24:1-10) a political process that apparently had only two winners: Nebuchadnezzar (24:1, 24:10-11) and the exiled nation. He had to witness to men who would the king (20:7-11; 29:15-18). These are the only two mentioned in the same book who opposed Jeremiah's prophetic preaching. Though the book does not reveal the name or place of Jeremiah's family, he personally did not know where he had been taken by his countrymen against his will after the fall of Jerusalem (24:1-11).

Some scholars have called Jeremiah the "weeping prophet." While he does occasionally weep for Israel's condition (9:14-15; 13:15-17), and this depth of concern speaks well of him, his response to his weeping was not to weep. He wept, but he wept in the presence of a determined, determined, long-suffering, and ultimately victorious God. His weeping and his response to it reveal the true nature of all his prophetic utterances. The spirit that continually moved to reveal his vision through Jeremiah's law (Jeremiah 1:1) was the same spirit that moved him to weep. He wept, but he wept in the presence of a determined, determined, long-suffering, and ultimately victorious God.

Part of the prophetic work is the comparison of the book that bears the name. It was an act to reveal the truth in the presence of what is now called the book of Jeremiah, for this book reveals the truth that has been given up for the present. The Jeremiah and Isaiah revealed themselves to comparing the book to a revelation of their truth, as well as the power of the word itself (2:14; 1:21).
