The Roads of the Roman Empire

Directions: Read the paragraphs below and study the map. Then answer the questions that follow.

The Roman Empire made some of the earliest and best of land-surfaced roads connecting the city of Rome to the farthest reaches of its empire. The stone-paved highways lasted for more than a thousand years, and some sections are still in use today. Ancient Roman authors claimed that there was no better mode of transportation in the world until the arrival of railroads about 1,800 years later. Historians began building roads in 122 B.C., following their first major conquests. The long-lasting streets of the Apian Way, reached 122 miles southeast out of Rome. Thereafter, roadbuilding kept pace with the empire's expansion. Eventually, Roman roads covered 54,000 miles around the Mediterranean and into the eastern Atlantic regions. The roads, constructed by slaves and soldiers, were wide enough for large wagons to pass each other. The principal use of the highways was to move Roman armies from one part of the empire to another. However, citizens were free to use the roads. The Roman citizenship laws once spoke of moving 50 miles in a cart in just two hours. However, travelers had to be alert for bandits, as people might simply "disappear" while riding on Roman roads.
