

Troubleshooting

■ Red indicator lights when a button is pressed, but the auto-rider equipment does not respond to remote commands - reposition the infrared emitter so that it is directly in the "IR sensor window" of the component you wish to control. Sometimes the location of the IR sensor is not obvious. Consult the owner's manual or the manufacturer of the component to determine its exact location.

■ Red indicator flickers at random - The HE1000A is designed to receive infrared signals and occasionally it may pick up random infrared "noise." The random flickering does not cause any harm, unless it appears to interfere with proper response to commands. Try moving or turning the HE1000A Remote Eye so that it is not affected by strong sunlight or light from a television screen. If flickering persists, try turning off the television receiver to see if it is affecting the HE1000A. The HE1000A Remote Eye may be moved away from the television to eliminate problems. Heavy electronic light dimmers may also cause interference. Try turning them off to test them.
