

Fiche 1 : Introduction à la sociologie

1. Définitions

La sociologie peut être définie comme l'étude (scientifique) des faits sociaux et/ou des actions sociales. L'action sociale est « une action entreprise en tenant compte des réactions des autres ». Les faits sociaux sont définis comme « l'ensemble des actions, pensées et sentiments extérieurs imposés à l'individu par la société ». Selon Emile Durkheim (1858-1917) le fait social est le résultat d'une conscience collective, distincte des actions, pensées et sentiments individuels.

Le but de la sociologie est de rendre visibles et compréhensibles des phénomènes sociaux qui ne sont pas immédiatement apparents. Selon Durkheim, elle essaie de formuler des « lois » sociologiques et d'expliquer le « social par le social ».

2. Classification

La sociologie fait partie des sciences sociales en tant qu'analyse de l'organisation sociale. D'autres exemples sont la science économique et la science politique en tant qu'analyse de l'organisation économique respectivement politique de la société.

Elle fait également partie des sciences humaines en tant qu'étude de l'homme en société, tout comme la philosophie, la psychologie ou l'histoire.

3. Les origines de la sociologie

Les origines remontent à la philosophie politique, la branche de la philosophie qui étudie les questions relatives au pouvoir politique, à l'État, au gouvernement, à la loi, à la politique, à la paix, à la justice et au bien commun entre autres.

La sociologie se réfère parfois aux sciences exactes. Auguste Comte (1798-1857) considérait que la sociologie devait être une espèce de « physique sociale », capable d'expliquer l'ensemble du social à l'aide de lois comparables à celles des sciences de la nature.

4. Les démarches sociologiques

Une première démarche est la démarche hypothético-déductive qui consiste à formuler d'abord une question de recherche et des hypothèses. Ensuite elle construit des indicateurs afin de tester les hypothèses énoncées. La vérification ou corroboration des hypothèses se fait par la confrontation des observations empiriques aux indicateurs (théoriques). Si les observations empiriques sont contraires à la théorie et/ou aux hypothèses formulées (réfutation de la théorie et/ou des hypothèses), alors la théorie et/ou les hypothèses doivent être reformulées afin de mieux expliquer les faits ou actions sociaux.

Une autre démarche souvent utilisée en sociologie est la démarche inductive. L'inductivisme est une méthode scientifique qui obtient des conclusions générales à partir de prémisses individuelles. Elle se caractérise par quatre étapes basiques: l'observation et l'enregistrement de tous les faits, l'analyse et la classification des
