Given their purpose the emergency declarations may precede an event A major disaster declaration is generally issued after catastrophes occur and constitutes broader authority for federal agencies to provide supplemental assistance to help state and local governments families and individuals and certain nonprofit organizations recover from the incident The end result of a presidential disaster declaration is well known if not entirely understood Various forms of assistance are provided including aid to families and individuals for uninsured needs and assistance to state and local governments and to certain non profits for rebuilding or replacing damaged infrastructure Over the last quarter century the amount of federal assistance provided through presidential disaster declarations has exceeded 150 billion Often in recent years Congress has enacted supplemental appropriations legislation to cover unanticipated costs While the amounts spent by the federal government on different programs may be reported and the progress of the recovery can be observed much less is known about the process that initiates all of this activity Yet it is a process that has resulted in an average of more than one disaster declaration a week over the last decade The disaster declaration procedure is foremost a process that preserves the discretion of the governor or tribal leader to request assistance and the President to decide to grant or not to grant supplemental help The process employs some measurable criteria for evaluating disaster damage in two broad areas Individual Assistance that aids families and individuals and Public Assistance that is mainly for emergency work such as debris removal and permanent repairs to infrastructure The criteria however also consider many other factors in each category of assistance that help decision makers assess the impact of an event on communities and states Under current law while a governor or a tribal leader may make a request the decision to issue a declaration rests solely with the President Congress has no formal role but has taken actions to adjust the terms of the process For example the Post Katrina Emergency Management Reform Act of 2006 P L 109 295 established an advocate to help small states with the declaration process More recently Congress passed the Hurricane Sandy Recovery Improvement Act P L 113 2 which had two potentially major impacts on the declaration process First the act authorized Native American tribal groups to directly request disaster assistance from the President rather than only requesting through a state governor The second potential major impact in the act was that FEMA was directed to update its criteria for considering whether to make a recommendation to the President for Individual Assistance declarations Since the decision for a declaration is at the discretion of the President there has been some speculation regarding the influence of political favor in these decisions Some have posited various connections between the political party of the governor requesting or the prominence of some state s congressional delegation on committee s important to FEMA While of interest those theories are usually not connected to or at least fail to consider the natural events that were the impetus for both the request and the decision

Fema National Response Framework Third Edition June 2016
Department of Homeland Security United States Government Fema,2019-03-18 FEMA National Response Framework Third Edition June 2016 Department of Homeland SecurityThis manual the FEMA National Response Framework Third Edition

June 2016 Department of Homeland Security is a guide to how the Nation responds to all types of disasters and emergencies. It is built on scalable, flexible, and adaptable concepts identified in the National Incident Management System to align key roles and responsibilities across the Nation. This Framework describes specific authorities and best practices for managing incidents that range from the serious but purely local to large-scale terrorist attacks or catastrophic natural disasters. The National Response Framework describes the principles, roles, and responsibilities and coordinating structures for delivering the core capabilities required to respond to an incident and further describes how response efforts integrate with those of the other mission areas. This Framework is always in effect and describes the doctrine under which the Nation responds to incidents. The structures, roles, and responsibilities described in this Framework can be partially or fully implemented in the context of a threat or hazard in anticipation of a significant event or in response to an incident. Selective implementation of National Response Framework structures and procedures allows for a scaled response, delivery of the specific resources and capabilities, and a level of coordination appropriate to each incident. The Response mission area focuses on ensuring that the Nation is able to respond effectively to all types of incidents that range from those that are adequately handled with local assets to those of catastrophic proportion that require marshaling the capabilities of the entire Nation. The objectives of the Response mission area define the capabilities necessary to save lives, protect property and the environment, meet basic human needs, stabilize the incident, restore basic services and community functionality, and establish a safe and secure environment to facilitate the integration of recovery activities.

1. The Response mission area includes 15 core capabilities: planning, public information and warning, operational coordination, critical transportation, environmental response, health and safety, fatality management, services, fire management and suppression, infrastructure systems, logistics and supply chain management, mass care services, mass search and rescue operations on scene, security, protection and law enforcement, operational communications, public health, healthcare and emergency medical services, and situational assessment. The priorities of the Response mission area are to save lives, protect property and the environment, stabilize the incident, and provide for basic human needs. The following principles establish fundamental doctrine for the Response mission area: engaged partnership, tiered response, scalable, flexible, and adaptable, operational capabilities, unity of effort through unified command, and readiness to act. Scalable, flexible, and adaptable coordinating structures are essential in aligning the key roles and responsibilities to deliver the Response mission area's core capabilities. The flexibility of such structures helps ensure that communities across the country can organize response efforts to address a variety of risks based on their unique needs, capabilities, demographics, governing structures, and non-traditional partners. This Framework is not based on a one-size-fits-all organizational construct but instead acknowledges the concept of tiered response, which emphasizes that response to incidents should be handled at the lowest jurisdictional level capable of handling the mission.

FEMA's Preparedness for the Next Catastrophic Disaster United States. Department of Homeland Security. Office of Inspector General, 2008. On July

31 2007 the House Committee on Oversight and Government Reform held a hearing to review the Federal Emergency Management Agency's FEMA preparedness to handle a future disaster During that hearing the Deputy Inspector General for Emergency Management Oversight testified that the New FEMA had made progress in many areas related to disaster preparedness but that generally FEMA was not fully prepared for a catastrophic disaster The Committee in turn requested that the Office of Inspector General OIG provide a high level assessment of the Department of Homeland Security DHS FEMA's preparedness for the next catastrophic disaster The primary objectives of our assessment were to identify key areas for preparing for a catastrophic disaster and determine the progress FEMA has made in the key areas since Hurricane Katrina struck in August 2005 We reviewed pertinent reports including those of our office and the Government Accountability Office GAO as well as congressional testimony We identified nine key areas critical to successful catastrophic preparedness efforts We collaborated with FEMA officials to identify two to five critical components within each key area We interviewed FEMA officials and evaluated documents provided by them We assessed FEMA's progress in each of the areas using a four tiered scale substantial progress moderate progress modest progress and limited or no progress Given the scope and limitations of our review we did not perform an in depth assessment of each of the nine key preparedness areas We used the critical components within each area as well as our broader knowledge of the key preparedness areas to gauge FEMA's overall progress in those areas
