

UNITED STATES

GOVERNMENT

The United States is a representative democratic government. This means people elect those who represent them in the government. We call these people elected officials. People elect officials at local, state, and national levels. At every level, people's interests in their government government jobs in the city, the state, and the nation. Elected officials work together to define the principles and structure of our government.

Federal government makes the laws for the whole country. The federal government has the power to:

- print money
- declare war
- build the military
- make treaties
- represent the United States in foreign countries
- make laws for things that affect everyone in the country

By the state legislatures, the people elect those who represent them in the state government. These people make the laws for the state. Like the United States constitution, state constitutions must enforce a set of rights that protect the rights of citizens.

At the local level, people elect those who represent them in the city, county, or state government. These people make the laws for the city, county, or state. People also elect city, county, and state judges.
