

Physicists have been arguing for years about whether it is "the universe" that changes to suit the past, present, or future. Physicist Stephen J. Gold has argued that it is the future that changes to suit the past. He says that the laws of physics that we know would be different in a universe with different laws. But, he thinks,

These results suggest that the use of balanced growth theory, which was a central part of the neoclassical growth model, is not appropriate for the analysis of growth in the presence of technological change.
