Abstract: Staphylococcus aureus (S. aureus) is a common pathogen that causes a wide range of infections. The purpose of this study was to determine the prevalence of S. aureus in the nasal cavity of healthy individuals. A total of 100 individuals were recruited from a local community. The results showed that the prevalence of S. aureus in the nasal cavity was 100%. The study also found that the colonization of S. aureus in the nasal cavity was associated with the use of antibiotics. These findings suggest that S. aureus is a common pathogen that colonizes the nasal cavity of healthy individuals, and the use of antibiotics may contribute to the colonization of S. aureus in the nasal cavity.

Abstract—This study examined the effects of a 12-week, 100% bodyweight resistance training program on the strength and body composition of 10 sedentary, middle-aged men. The program consisted of three sessions per week, each targeting a different muscle group. The results showed that the participants experienced significant increases in muscle strength and body composition, including increases in muscle mass and decreases in body fat. The findings suggest that a 12-week, 100% bodyweight resistance training program can be an effective means of improving strength and body composition in sedentary, middle-aged men.

Abstract: Polio (anterior horn) myopathy of horses, characterized by acute onset of weakness and atrophy of the muscles of the lower limbs, is a sporadic disease.

Abstract This research examines the effects of a 12-week, 100-hour, noncredit, intensive training program on the knowledge and skills of individuals with a high school diploma or GED who are seeking employment in the health care industry. The program is designed to provide participants with the necessary skills and knowledge to enter the health care industry as a medical assistant. The program is evaluated using a pre-test/post-test design. The results of the evaluation show that participants who completed the program demonstrated significantly higher levels of knowledge and skill than those who did not complete the program. The program is found to be effective in preparing individuals for employment in the health care industry.
