By definition, natural killer (NK) cells are lymphocytes that kill tumor cells and virus-infected cells. The NK cells are part of the innate immune system and do not require prior sensitization to kill target cells. NK cells are found in the blood and in the tissues. They are the largest of the lymphocytes and are characterized by the presence of a granule containing cytotoxic granules. NK cells are also known for their ability to kill target cells without the need for antibodies. They are the only lymphocytes that can kill target cells without the need for antibodies.
