Nuclear Fusion

Nuclear fusion is the process by which two or more light nuclei combine to form a heavier nucleus, releasing energy. This process is the source of energy in stars and is used in nuclear fusion reactors.

The process of nuclear fusion is a complex one, involving the overcoming of the electrostatic repulsion between the positively charged nuclei. This is achieved by heating the nuclei to extremely high temperatures, creating a plasma state.

In this and other nuclear reactions, the total mass of the system is conserved, but the mass of the individual nuclei is not. The mass difference is converted into energy, as described by Einstein's equation $E=mc^2$.

Nuclear fusion is a promising source of clean, sustainable energy. It has the potential to provide a virtually unlimited supply of energy, with no greenhouse gas emissions and no long-lived radioactive waste.
