

The TV & Film Geek

Strengths: If you're the kind of geek, you're likely a romantic. Special effects and lens flares are great, but ultimately it's the relationship arcs of the characters that draw you in (admit it—you're still totally shipping Ned and Irene). You also have a great memory. You remember the important things: the first date, the first kiss, the first thing that guy learned how to play on the tubaphone in that episode of Futurama (like I said, the important things). Apply this to your anniversary, your girlfriend's birthday, and the names of all of her friends, and you're sitting pretty.

Weaknesses: Despite all the CG, film and video are inherently more real-seeming than other types of media. So remind yourself that life rarely occurs with structured story arcs, supporting characters who lack motivations of their own, and a tidy resolution in twenty minutes or less. And a word of warning to the letter-writing types who campaign for new seasons of shows canceled by the network: Relationships aren't like Jeopardy or Family Guy. When they're done, they're done, and no amount of complaining on the Internet will bring them back.

Special abilities: Sense of adventure +3, Empathic sensor +3, Minute recall +2

The Gamer

Strengths: Like comic book fans, you gamers are dedicated and loyal, but you're also seekers of novelty (after all, even MMOs like World of Warcraft get stale without patches and expansion packs). If you're a gamer, you're constantly upgrading and leveling up, a competitive instinct that suits the thrill of the chase in the dating world.

Weaknesses: The flip side for you as a gamer is a tendency to confuse girls' RL with your virtual domains in games. Think of girls
