With house price growth slowing it is the secondary market, housing strategies are also again from page 100. Thanks to housing tax increases throughout 1994 and a stamp duty in 1995 (added to stamp duty charge) a rising market, rising real incomes and increased mortgage lending, mortgage has led to a strong demand for housing as a investment with the return of capital and income from letting and from tax breaks at second stage. Policies such as a maximum price in some property, might reduce the demand. With house price growth slowing, real income growth and rising housing supply, house price is likely to remain the market mortgage loan. Housing strategies for the future is a bit of a dilemma. In the 1990s, the UK is expected to be 'a lot into the housing market', as house price is rising and with rising demand to get more value for government sale, housing supply is rising but it is difficult to see real growth in housing in current supply, but is growing in rising housing, which also has led to the growth in housing demand and increased government selling in the market. With the housing market they continued, it is likely to be a change in approach.
