Modeling the impact of multiple factors on a response variable is a common task in many fields. In this paper, we propose a new method for modeling the impact of multiple factors on a response variable. The proposed method is based on the idea of using a single function to model the impact of all factors. This function is called the "global function". The global function is defined as the sum of the individual functions for each factor. The individual functions are called the "local functions". The local functions are defined as the functions that model the impact of each factor on the response variable. The global function is then used to predict the response variable for a given set of factor values. The proposed method is simple and easy to use, and it can be applied to a wide range of problems. It is also computationally efficient, and it can be used to analyze large datasets. The proposed method is a promising new approach to modeling the impact of multiple factors on a response variable.
