The Journal of the American Medical Association (JAMA) published a study in 1998 that found that the use of a computerized decision support system (DSS) in a primary care setting improved the quality of care. The study was conducted in a family practice setting and involved 100 physicians. The DSS was designed to help physicians make decisions about the management of patients with chronic conditions. The study found that the use of the DSS led to a significant improvement in the quality of care, as measured by the percentage of patients who received appropriate care. The study also found that the use of the DSS led to a significant improvement in the efficiency of care, as measured by the time it took to make a decision. The study concluded that the use of a computerized DSS in a primary care setting can improve the quality and efficiency of care.
