

The Link Between Success and Beauty

For quite a long time, theories and certain studies have supported the idea that being beautiful is good (David, Bernil, & Walter, 1975). There is a study on physical beauty stereotype that focuses on the way in which beauty can influence an individual's perception on personality traits. It also looked at the possibility of physical beauty leading to a better individual life. Through certain factors, such as age, body size and gender, it is clear that physical beauty has an impact on success on different aspects in life, namely, performance perceptions, popularity and social interaction.

When reviewing studies regarding physical beauty, experts most often focus on certain factors, including age, body size and gender. These three are the most common factors. It is vital to look into these factors when taking physical beauty into consideration. Later on, we will be exploring on the effects that physical beauty has on actual success, particularly in certain categories in life which were common among the studies.

Impact of Physical Beauty

After taking into consideration the different methods in which researchers focus on the concept of physical beauty, we will look into the impact that physical beauty has on success. When looking at all of the studies in general, it is fairly clear that physical beauty usually impacts one's measure of success. At first, it has been assumed and believed that being physically beautiful can only bring positive results for an individual. Even though it may true in certain cases, studies have proven that being physically beautiful may not necessarily result to success (Singh & Lancaster, 1976).
