Mining Industry M. Guarascio, C.J. Huybrechts, M. David, 2012-12-06 When Prof Hatheron was asked to delineate the history of geostatistics he objected that such discipline is still too young to be treated from a historical point of view The more and more increasing practical applications requiring newer and newer methodologies would rather suggest the necessity of emphasizing the steps taken and the results obtained up to now The reason of certain epistemological choices as well as the difficulties and success in establishing a dialogue with the people most likely to benefit from the results of geostatistics are necessary premises to understand the present status of this discipline The human bearing of characters of the persons that have introduced and studied this science blending theory with economic practices is a factor playing a not inconsiderable role in the development of geostatistics These concepts were the guidelines in organizing the ASI Geo stat 75 Canada France and Italy are three different situations in an industrial and academic context especially in the interaction between these fields Yet it was our impression that the time had come to assemble experts scholars and other people interested in geostatistics in order to evaluate its present position on various levels in the different countries and to discuss its future prospects Prof Hatheron and Hr Krige as well as other prominent people were of the same opinion
