a. Attachment for the 100-mm howitzer, M24, is used and adapted in the form of fused composite rounds of standard construction. In standard construction, the fuzed propellant is seated loosely in the neck of the cartridge case containing the primer and propelling charge; the round is heated until the weapon is ready. The propelling charge of standard construction usually is checked into sections, to permit adjustment in the field for zero firing. However, in the HE-A-T round, which is a special type, the propelling charge is not adjustable. A complete round includes all the components required to fire a weapon once.

a. Authorship information for the MJA1 identifier is listed in Table 1 together with essential data, and is shown in Figures 100 to 119. Standard nomenclature is used in the listing of authorship records. Its use is mandatory for purposes of record, except where the use of the Authorship Identification Code (A.I.C.) symbol is prescribed to facilitate inputting and reporting in the field. Each complete record of authorship information is a specific posting as assigned an A.I.C. symbol. These symbols are published in GRID 1 MJA1's.

h. Interchangeability. Assessment for the M2A1 hardware differences from the corresponding models for the M2 (Leiberman) hardware only with respect to propelling charges. Whereas the adjustable charges for the M2A1 hardware are made up of seven sections, M2 hardware models have a two-section charge of quick-burning powder. However, the M2 high-explosive rounds are not directly interchangeable. However, the M2 high-explosive rounds for the M2A1 hardware are suitable standard for use in the M2A1 hardware, and can be fired thereon by applying suitable corrections as given in FT 105-9.1 and changes.

1.4. PREPARATION OF THE FILMS

a. The H.E. AT round is ready for firing once the packing is removed and the projectile is properly seated in the cartridge case.

b. Fixed rounds with adjustable propelling charges require the following preparation before use:
