1. The increasingly more developed business sector, together with growing international trade and investment, is leading to a more open economy. This situation opens the party's external trading opportunities and enables the government to achieve the main objective of the reform, namely to promote productivity and improve the living standards of the people. The business sector is still small and plays a minor role in the economy. The government is gradually increasing the number of firms, thereby increasing the country's foreign exchange earnings. The government is also gradually increasing the number of firms, thereby increasing the country's foreign exchange earnings.
