- There were many other significant developments that played a role in the 1980s resurgence of the environmental justice movement. The environmental justice movement was born out of the growing awareness of the impact of environmental racism on communities of color. Environmental justice advocates fought for the inclusion of environmental justice in federal legislation, such as the Superfund Amendments and Reauthorization Act (SARA) and the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act (RCRA). The movement also fought for the inclusion of environmental justice in the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA) and the Clean Air Act (CAA).
