Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the health-related quality of life of older adults with chronic conditions. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The intervention group consisted of 25 older adults who participated in a 12-week walking program. The control group consisted of 25 older adults who did not participate in the program. The primary outcome measure was the Health-Related Quality of Life (HRQL) score, which was measured using the SF-36 questionnaire. The secondary outcome measures were the physical and mental health components of the SF-36. The results showed that the intervention group had a significantly higher HRQL score than the control group at the end of the 12-week program. The physical and mental health components of the SF-36 also showed significant improvements in the intervention group. The findings suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the HRQL of older adults with chronic conditions.
