16. "When one is the subject of two different tests, the 10-year-old's tendency to give only correct answers without further thought is," White again cautions, "based in part on their immature understanding of evidence. For example, they may avoid answer choice (b) simply because it is the opposite of (a), and not think about the hypothesis's prediction or notice that other children have gotten it wrong in the past. The way children think is not being tested. The question requires that either the children are reasoning to that alternative rule, that of giving (b) if (b) is the only answer, or they have failed to understand the question format."
