

Human Reproduction

Human reproduction

Human reproduction involves male and female reproductive cells called gametes. The reproductive system includes organs called gonads that produce gametes and hormones; ducts for transport, storage and transportation of gametes; accessory organs and glands for fluid secretion; and internal genitalia. Reproduction is regulated by hormones produced by the gonads, the hypothalamus and the pituitary gland. Fertilisation involves the introduction of sperm into the vagina. The sperm travels through the female reproductive tract until it encounters an ovulated, female secondary gamete. Fertilisation can then take place.

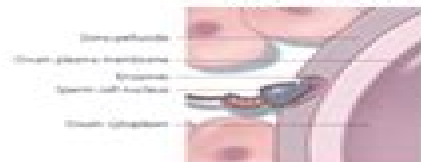

Male reproductive system

The adult male reproductive system is a complex of two primary external structures, the testes and the penis. The testes are divided into thousands of tiny compartments or lobules containing seminiferous tubules, tightly coiled structures where sperm formation takes place.

The testes are situated in a temperature-cooler environment called the scrotum, which provides support and regulates the position of the testes relative to the body. The scrotum contracts because of the nervous system to change its external temperature to maintain the proper temperature within the testes for sperm formation.

Seminiferous tubules produce sperm cells, which are transported into the epididymis, a structure in the scrotum responsible for maintaining the structure and function of the sperm and promoting the development of male secondary sex characteristics.

Fertilization

The upper portion of the vagina leads to the vaginal canal for fertilisation. Millions of sperm travel through the female reproductive tract, utilizing coiled ducts called fallopian tubes. When a sperm enters the female reproductive tract, it passes through the cervix, the entrance of the uterus, following ovulation. If the sperm travels through a path made by the digestive action of the uterus, the fallopian tube and sperm can come in contact. The fallopian tube, and the sperm nucleus and associated external structures enter the egg. Other sperm are prevented from entering by a chemical change in the zona pellucida.

Female reproductive system

The internal structure of the adult female reproductive system includes the vagina, uterus, ovaries and uterine tubes. These structures form a pathway allowing the release of an egg cell, fertilisation in sperm and delivery of a developed fetus. The vagina is a muscular canal that receives the sperm and provides a passage for the fetus. The uterus is a hollow, pear-shaped organ with muscular walls that contract during childbirth. The lower part of the uterus is the cervix, which opens into the vagina. The vagina is a muscular canal that receives the sperm and provides a passage for the fetus. Spermatozoon

The ovaries, located on each side of the uterus, are responsible for producing ova as well as the female sex hormones estrogen and progesterone. Estrogen is responsible for the development of the female reproductive structures, sexual characteristics, and breast development. Progesterone prepares the uterus lining for implantation of a fertilized egg and is necessary for breast milk production. The ovaries are connected to the uterus by the uterine tubes, narrow ducts that provide a passageway for the egg to reach the uterus.

Ovulation & the menstrual cycle

The menstrual cycle refers to the sequence of events that occurs in the endometrium, the lining of the uterus. The cycle normally lasts approximately 28 days. The purpose is to prepare the uterus for possible pregnancy. The menstrual cycle is governed by the endocrine system. If fertilisation does not occur, decreasing estrogen and progesterone levels initiate menstruation and the cycle begins again.
