What is Software Testing?

- Software Testing is a part of software development process.
- Software Testing is an activity to detect and identify the defects in the software.
- The objective of testing is to release quality product to the client.

Software Quality

- Quality: Quality is defined as justification of all the requirements of a customer in a product.
 - Note: Quality is not defined in the product. It is defined in the customer's mind.
- Quality software is reasonably
 - Bug-free.
 - Delivered on time.
 - Within budget.
 - Meets requirements and/or expectations.
 - Maintainable.

Product Vs Project

- If software application is developed for specific customer based on the requirement then it is called Project.
- If software application is developed for multiple customers based on market requirements then it called Product.

Why do we need testing?

- Ensure that software is bug free.
- Ensure that system meets customer requirements and software specifications.
- Ensure that system meets end user expectations.
- Fixing the bugs identified after release is more expensive.
- Error: Any incorrect human action that produces a problem in the system is called an error.
- Defect/Bug: Deviation from the expected behavior to the actual behavior of the system is called defect.
- Failure: The deviation identified by end-user while using the system is called a failure.
