In this lesson, you will be able to determine your current level of fitness. Through the different physical fitness tests, you will discover which fitness components your body is strong in. Knowing about your strengths and weaknesses allows you to focus your fitness program on the right areas through the tests, as well as what to be focused on this semester, you will be able to:

1. describe the different tests that can be performed to assess health-related fitness components;
2. determine which fitness components your body is good at and poor at;
3. discover your current physical fitness level through specific fitness-related fitness tests performed;
4. understand which fitness components are important for different fitness-related health-related fitness components, as well as the different activities that improve each fitness component;
5. perform the physical fitness tests effectively and consistently; properly interpret and explain test results;
6. recognize and understand the testing results and what to improve upon;
7. compare current fitness level to personal health-related objectives of physical fitness assessment tests.

Within this module, you will be provided with activities that specifically target each health-related fitness component. These activities will allow students to see through the health-related fitness components the right current fitness component.
