

ANSWERS AND EXPLANATIONS

Each time a person enters the room, the computer generates a number and then asks randomly whether they should be given points. It counts the number of times. The data were not plotted until the end of the study, but that presentation was an effective way to allow the group to see what was happening. That makes responses about the number of times they entered higher. The presentation was not very difficult, and the group spent the paper-pencil, budget, and computer sessions for average scores. Each group was given a computer and was asked to enter the data. The problem of entering the data on the computer was not a problem for the group, and the group was able to enter the data.

The authors took a more complex approach. The authors used a computer and the computer was the teacher. The group was asked to enter the data, and the computer was the teacher. The problem of entering the data on the computer was not a problem for the group, and the group was able to enter the data.

Each time a group of students was asked to enter the data, the computer was the teacher. The group was asked to enter the data, and the computer was the teacher. The problem of entering the data on the computer was not a problem for the group, and the group was able to enter the data.

The data were not plotted until the end of the study. That makes the data more interesting and makes the data more interesting. The data were not plotted until the end of the study.

The authors used a computer and the computer was the teacher.
