Extinction Ashley Dawson, 2016-08-01 Some thousands of years ago the world was home to an immense variety of large mammals. From woolly mammoths and saber-toothed tigers to giant ground sloths and armadillos the size of automobiles, these spectacular creatures roamed freely. Then human beings arrived, devouring their way down the food chain as they spread across the planet. They began a process of voracious extinction that has continued to the present. Headlines today are made by the existential threat confronting remaining large animals such as rhinos and pandas. But the devastation summoned by humans extends to humbler realms of creatures including beetles, bats, and butterflies. Researchers generally agree that the current extinction rate is nothing short of catastrophic. Currently, the earth is losing about a hundred species every day. This relentless extinction, Ashley Dawson contends in a primer that combines vast scope with elegant precision, is the product of a global attack on the commons: the great trove of air, water, plants, and creatures, as well as collectively created cultural forms such as language, that have been regarded traditionally as the inheritance of humanity as a whole. This attack has its genesis in the need for capital to expand relentlessly into all spheres of life. Extinction, Dawson argues, cannot be understood in isolation from a critique of our economic system. To achieve this, we need to transgress the boundaries between science, environmentalism, and radical politics. Extinction: A Radical History performs this task with both brio and brilliance.
