

A custom electronic board, possibly a breadboard or a custom PCB, populated with various components. The board is densely packed with components, including integrated circuits (ICs), resistors, capacitors, and connectors. The components are arranged in a structured manner, with some larger components like ICs and connectors being more prominent. The board is connected to a power source, as indicated by the presence of a digital multimeter (DMM) and a power supply unit (PSU) on the right side of the workbench.

A digital multimeter (DMM) and a power supply unit (PSU) are visible on the right side of the workbench. The DMM is connected to the board, and the PSU is providing power to the circuit. The DMM display shows a reading of "0.00". The PSU has a digital display showing "0.00".

A collection of tools is visible on the workbench, including screwdrivers, pliers, and a soldering iron. The tools are arranged in a somewhat organized manner, with some tools being used for the project. The workbench is made of wood and is cluttered with various components and tools.
