Setting Standards for Financial Reporting A. Bowdoin Van Riper, 1994-07-21 The book begins with an overview of how and why the present self-regulatory arrangement for setting standards for financial reporting in the private sector came about in 1973 A brief description of the new structure is followed by a discussion of the essential elements of meaningful self-regulation A schism emerged between advocates of neutrality and objectivity in standard setting and those who think the primary concern should be for possible economic and social consequences Early clashes between traditional views and newer insights are described setting the stage for an account of serious resistance to change Powerful interests mount determined efforts to thwart the standard setters undercutting not only self-regulation but also the intent of the federal securities acts of 1933 and 1934 The practical and philosophical bases for the opposing views are examined and recommendations are presented for ensuring continuation of private sector standard setting despite the intensity of these views

Accounting Ethics: Crisis in accounting ethics J. Edward Ketz, 2006 The ruination of investors in Enron WorldCom Waste Management Aldelphia Tyco and scores of other business concerns has raised questions about the adequacy and relevance of academic research into accounting ethics as well as the ethical nature of professional parties This research collection includes important papers from key journals and books that reassess theories research studies and professional practices in the field of accounting ethics In addition to examining the current crisis in the creditability of financial reports many of the papers here work toward developing a body of knowledge that will protect the investing public in the future

Accounting for the hidden costs of agrifood systems in data-scarce contexts Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, 2023-11-06 This background paper to The State of Food and Agriculture 2023 reviews the methods used as well as the data required to estimate the hidden environmental social and health costs associated with agrifood systems The studies analysed are based on the true cost accounting approach which can facilitate improved decision making by policymakers businesses farmers investors and consumers The reviewed studies demonstrate that hidden costs of agrifood systems are considerable and that action is needed at global national and local levels To apply true cost accounting at the country level the methods developed must be downscaled and the data limitations overcome This review goes through each cost category environmental social and health and proposes approaches to deal with them with a focus on country level estimates and analysis especially in data scarce countries Where data are not available or time is limited methods combining secondary data are suggested In some cases the suggestion is to collaborate with research centres The paper further argues that when addressing hidden costs in agrifood systems trade offs may arise which may require the use of more complex tools such as partial and general equilibrium models to analyse their impacts on different areas In general the extent of the compromise will be minimized if there are at least as many policy instruments as there are objectives For example if a country seeks to restore fish stocks and address rural poverty restricting catch alone could increase poverty in the artisanal fishing community Adding income support however could allow both objectives to be met

National Environmental Accounting Joy Hecht, 2012-05-04 This book presents national environmental or green accounting as it has developed in Europe and other parts of the world It introduces the most recent methods developed through the United Nations Statistical Department and other international organizations but bridges the gap between the superficial treatment of environmental accounting in economics textbooks and environmental literature on the one hand and the highly technical manuals of international organizations on the other Joy Hecht begins with a history and introduction to national income accounting The first part of her book explains how the environmental accounts build on the structure of the 1993 System of National Accounts She then shows the UN approach to accounting applied to pollution recycling and the management of natural resources such as forests minerals and fisheries The third section discusses how the accounts approach green GDP and other macroeconomic indicators The book concludes by going beyond the UN structures to discuss other adjusted macroeconomic measures and how accounting data can be used to build them National Environmental Accounting is a non technical introduction to an increasingly important field It is a must read for anyone interested in how environmental accounts can help society move towards greater sustainability
