

Reproduction of Flowering Plants: From Flowers to Fruits

The Need Of Being Versed In Country Things

The house had gone to bring again
To the midnight sky a sunset glow.
Now the chimney was all of the house that stood,
Like a pistil after the petals go.

The barn opposed across the way,
That would have joined the house in flame
Had it been the will of the wind, was left
To bear forsaken the place's name.

No more it opened with all one end
For teams that came by the stony road
To drum on the floor with scurrying hoofs
And brush the snow with the summer load.

The birds that came to it through the air
At broken windows flew out and in,
Their murmur more like the sigh we sigh
From too much dwelling on what has been.

Yet for them the lilac renewed its leaf,
And the aged elm, though touched with fire;
And the dry pump flung up an awkward arm;
And the fence post carried a strand of wire.

For them there was really nothing sad.
But though they rejoiced in the nest they kept,
One had to be versed in country things
Not to believe the phoebes wept.

—Robert Frost

The objectives of this lab are that you:

- learn the structures of a flower and their functions
- become familiar with the ways that flower and fruit structures vary from species to species
- learn the floral origin of the various structures of a fruit
- understand the fruit structure of a variety of familiar fruits and "vegetables"

Introduction: flowers and fruits in perspective

Flowers are the reproductive structures of flowering plants (Angiosperms). Flowers can range from being very colorful and conspicuous, such as a rose or orchid, to being very simple, reduced and inconspicuous, such as those of grasses, oaks, and elms. The function of a flower is to produce the reproductive cells of the plant (eggs and pollen) and then produce seeds, the dormant young plant of the next generation.

The seeds of flowering plants are surrounded by a tissue called the fruit, which may be fleshy or dry. The culinary designation of "vegetable" is based on the use of the plant part (eaten as part of the main course in a meal). Vegetables are actually various plant parts: some are fruits (e.g., tomatoes and peppers), leaf stalks (celery), leaf blades (spinach), lateral buds (Brussels sprouts), young shoot (asparagus), massive flowering structure in bud stage (broccoli), root (sweet potato), underground storage stem (white potato).

Functions of fruit. Although fruits come in all shapes and sizes, they all function in protecting the seeds inside and in aiding seed dispersal. Protection may be afforded by hardening of the fruit to make accessing the seeds more difficult, or by accumulation of acids or other toxins. Fleshy colored fruit attract birds and animals; seeds pass through the gut unharmed. Some types of seeds cannot germinate unless they have first passed through the digestive tract of an animal. Many fruits promote wind dispersal. Other fruits have hooks, spines, and bristles that readily cling to fur and clothing—just walk your dog in an old field in autumn and see! Fruits called pods dry out as they mature and rip open, flinging out the seeds.
