Francis D'Arcy, C. J. Speirs, 1988 Handbook of Research Methods in Cardiovascular Behavioral Medicine Neil Schneiderman, Stephen M. Weiss, Peter G. Kaufmann, 2013-11-21 Cardiovascular disease continues to be the number one cause of death in the United States. Behavioral medicine was developed and shaped into the one source of morbidity and mortality in our country following the definition of behavioral medicine by the American Heart Association. Despite a 35% reduction since 1964, cardiovascular disease remains the leading cause of death in the United States. Behavioral medicine is the interdisciplinary field concerned with the development and integration of behavioral and biomedical science knowledge and techniques to the prevention, diagnosis, treatment, and rehabilitation of cardiovascular disease. The Framingham study among others has identified the application of this knowledge and these techniques to prevention, diagnosis, treatment, and rehabilitation. Three major risk factors implicated in the development of CHD are smoking, elevated serum cholesterol, and high blood pressure. At this concept of biobehavioral collaboration, given that these factors account for less than 50% of the variance associated with CHD, it is obvious that additional diagnostic, treatment, and prevention strategies must be identified if further progress is to be made in disease prevention and simultaneously among others.
