Uniform (but not almost) circular motion is a special case of uniform circular motion and velocity is constant in that special case. Consider the following:

Example 1:

Three points on a banked track are indicated by the three dots on the car. The car is moving at a constant speed. The track is banked at an angle. The car is moving in a circular path. The car is moving in a circular path. The car is moving in a circular path.

Example 2:

Example 3:

Three points on a banked track are indicated by the three dots on the car. The car is moving at a constant speed. The track is banked at an angle. The car is moving in a circular path. The car is moving in a circular path. The car is moving in a circular path.

Three points on a banked track are indicated by the three dots on the car. The car is moving at a constant speed. The track is banked at an angle. The car is moving in a circular path. The car is moving in a circular path. The car is moving in a circular path.
