With approximately 100,000 people living in the San Francisco Bay Area, the population is well above the national average. The region's diverse ethnic and racial composition, including a large Asian population, adds to the complexity of the region's social and economic challenges. The region's economy is heavily dependent on the technology sector, which has led to a high cost of living and a significant income inequality. The region's political and social landscape is also shaped by its history of immigration and its role as a hub for innovation and entrepreneurship.
