the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are illiterate has increased by 100 million. In 1990, 750 million people could not read or write. By 2000, that number had risen to 850 million. The World Bank estimates that by 2015, the number of illiterate people in the world will reach 1 billion. This is a staggering increase, and it is a reflection of the fact that the world's population is growing at an unprecedented rate. In 1990, the world's population was 5.3 billion. By 2000, it had grown to 6.1 billion. And by 2015, it is projected to reach 7.9 billion. This rapid growth is putting a tremendous strain on the world's resources, and it is also making it more difficult to provide basic education to all of the world's children. The World Bank is working to address this problem by providing financial and technical assistance to developing countries to help them improve their education systems. The bank is also working to promote the use of information technology in education, which can help to make learning more effective and efficient. By working together, we can help to ensure that every child in the world has the opportunity to learn and to reach their full potential.
