

289. Effects can be plausibly identified as caused by social factors:

Most major evidence to date from almost every line of research, covering the past few years, points to some reason attributable to something as simple as stress.

However, other people are opposed to the general conclusion of stress as the only cause of behavior. Some think it is simply wrong to make the link at all, while others are "chipping away" at the basic theory.

290. Therefore, the other arguments against the general conclusion of stress as the cause of social factors:

291. List all the evidence of arguments for and against the general conclusion of stress as the cause of social factors:

(List all the evidence you agree is important with this. Support your answer.)
