Memo For Agriculture Pgrade1november:

Making Catfish Bait Out of Government Boys Claire Strom, 2010 This first full length study of the cattle tick eradication program in the United States offers a new perspective on the fate of the yeomanry in the twentieth century South during a period when state and federal governments were both increasing and centralizing their authority As Claire Strom relates the power struggles that complicated efforts to wipe out the Boophilus tick she explains the motivations and concerns of each group involved including large and small scale cattle farmers scientists and officials at all levels of government In the remote rural South such as the piney woods of south Georgia and north Florida resistance to mandatory treatment of cattle was unusually strong and sometimes violent Cattle often ranged free and their owners raised them mostly for local use rather than faraway markets Cattle farmers in such areas shows Strom perceived a double threat in tick eradication mandates In addition to their added costs eradication schemes with their top down imposition of government expertise were anathema to the yeomanry's notions of liberty Strom contextualizes her southern focus within the national scale of the cattle industry discussing for instance the contentious place of cattle drives in American agricultural history Because Mexico was the primary source of potential tick reinfestation Strom examines the political and environmental history of the Rio Grande giving the book a transnational perspective Debates about the political and economic culture of small farmers have tended to focus on earlier periods in American history Here Strom shows that pockets of yeoman culture survived into the twentieth century and that these communities had the power to block if only temporarily the expansion of the American state
