Microbial Reproduction: Microbial Growth

Objectives: Following this activity students will be able to: (1) describe the process of microbial growth and reproduction; (2) explain the factors that influence microbial growth; (3) describe the different types of microbial growth curves; (4) explain the importance of microbial growth in various fields of study.

Background: Microbial reproduction is the process by which a microorganism produces a copy of itself. This process is essential for the survival and growth of the organism.

Microbial Growth Curves: The graph showing the change in the number of microorganisms over time is called a growth curve.

A growth curve is a plot showing the relationship between time and the number of microorganisms. It is used to study the growth of microorganisms under different conditions.

1. Why do you need to know the growth curve of a microorganism? (What information does it give you about growth?)

It tells you how fast the microorganism is growing, and it tells you when the growth is slowing down or stopping.

2. How do you think different growth curves represent different microorganisms?

Some have a fast growth rate and some have a slow growth rate.

Microbial Growth:

Microbial growth is the increase in the number of microorganisms in a population. It is a process that occurs in all living organisms.

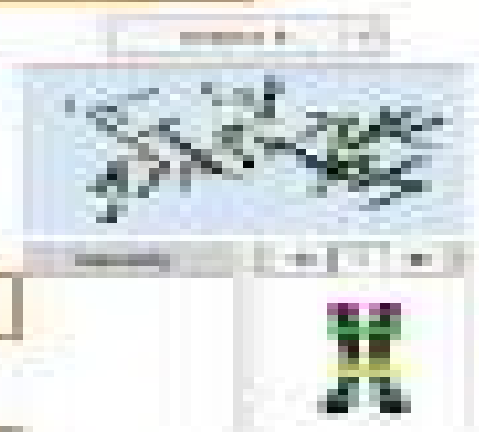

In this lesson, we will be studying the growth of microorganisms. We will be looking at the different types of growth curves and how they are used to study microorganisms.

3. How does the shape of the growth curve change as the growth rate changes?

If the growth rate is fast, the curve will be steep. If the growth rate is slow, the curve will be shallow.

4. How does the growth curve change as the growth rate changes?

If the growth rate is fast, the curve will be steep. If the growth rate is slow, the curve will be shallow.
