1. Ensure your system contains a room thermostat and a hot water thermostat, and that both are set to appropriate temperature levels. Typically 21°C for the room temperature and between 55 - 62°C for the hot water temperature.
2. Programme your heating, and hot water to be off when you are not in the house. If you are concerned about possible hot storage tank exposure (see work 1), it is advisable to fit a hot protection system - your installer can advise you about this.
3. Think about how you use your domestic hot water - if you have a storage cylinder, it is not necessary to have this bath/shower all the time, even when you are in the house.
4. Calculate the heat (in litres) required for your central heating. Every house responds differently when the heating is switched on. Adjust the set-point so that you are not cold when you get up in the morning. A shorter heat up time is required for other heating periods.
5. In the evening, when the house is up to temperature, it is often possible to reduce the heating set-point before you go to bed, without any noticeable reduction in comfort.
