

Mathematical Representation of the relationship between variables

Consider a simple example: a car moving with a constant speed. The distance traveled by the car is directly proportional to the time taken. This relationship can be represented by a linear equation: $d = vt$, where d is the distance, v is the speed, and t is the time. The graph of this equation is a straight line passing through the origin. The slope of the line represents the speed of the car. This is a simple example of a linear relationship. In more complex systems, the relationships between variables can be non-linear, and the mathematical representation can be more complicated. For example, the relationship between the force and the displacement of a spring is non-linear, and is represented by Hooke's law: $F = kx$, where F is the force, k is the spring constant, and x is the displacement. The graph of this equation is a curve that starts at the origin and increases as the displacement increases.
