Abstract Background: While the need for training in new technology skills is widely acknowledged, training is often not available, and therefore people in need of it are left out. This paper explores ways to address this problem. Methods: The authors used a variety of techniques to identify training needs and to develop a training program. Results: The authors identified a number of training needs and developed a training program that addresses these needs. Conclusions: The authors conclude that training is an important part of the process of addressing the needs of people in need of it. They also discuss some of the challenges of training and offer some suggestions for addressing these challenges.
