Executive Branch

The Executive Branch is one of the three branches of the United States government, alongside the Legislative Branch and the Judicial Branch. It is made up of the President and the Vice President, who are elected by the people. The President is the head of the Executive Branch and has the power to sign laws and make decisions about the country.

The Executive Branch is responsible for enforcing the laws that the Legislative Branch creates. In the heart of the Executive Branch is the President of the United States. The President is elected by the people of the United States and serves a term of four years. The President lives and works in the White House, which is located in Washington, D.C., the capital city of the United States.

The President has several important duties. One of the most important is to make sure that the laws passed by Congress are carried out. This means that the President, along with their team of advisors and officials, must make sure that the government agencies are doing their jobs correctly. For example, the President might work with the Department of Education to improve schools or with the Department of Homeland Security to keep the country safe.
