Tom Montgomery Fate, 2011-06-07 Cabin Fever might be described as a modern Walden if you can imagine Thoreau married with a job three kids and a minivan A seasonal memoir written alternately from a little cabin in the Michigan woods and a house in suburban Chicago the book engages readers in a serious yet irreverent conversation about Thoreau's relevance in the modern age The author turns Thoreau's immortal statement I went to the woods because I wished to live deliberately on its head with the phrase I got married and had children because I wished to live deliberately Though Fate spends half his time at the cabin this is no world renouncing back to nature paean Unlike Thoreau during his Walden years he balances his solitude with full engagement in family and civic life Fate's writing reflects this balancing of nature and family in stories such as The Confused Cardinal in which a male cardinal feeds chicks of another species and leads to a reflection on parenting In the Time of Cicadas which juxtaposes his wife's hysterectomy with the burgeoning fecundity of the seventeen year cicadas coming out to mate and in a beautiful essay reminiscent of E B White's Once More to the Lake in which Fate takes his son to the same cabin his father took him as a child In his exploration of how we are to live a more deliberate life amid a high tech materialist culture Fate invites readers into an interrogation of their own lives and into a new kind of vision the possibility of
