- There is a growing body of evidence that suggests that the use of a structured approach to the assessment of a patient's mental state can improve the reliability and validity of the assessment. This approach involves the use of a structured interview, which is a standardized set of questions designed to elicit information about a patient's mental state. The structured interview is typically conducted by a trained professional, such as a psychiatrist or psychologist, and is designed to be consistent across different assessors and settings. This approach has been shown to be more reliable and valid than unstructured interviews, which are often conducted in a more informal and inconsistent manner. The structured interview is also more efficient than unstructured interviews, as it allows for a more focused and systematic assessment of the patient's mental state.
