Brown's Nautical Almanac R. Ingram-Brown, 1858 New Generation Vaccines Gregory Gregoriadis, Brenda McCormack, Anthony C. Allison, George Poste, 2012-12-06 Proceedings of a NATO ASI held at Cape Sounion Beach Greece June 24 July 5 1992 Vaccines Anthony C. Allison, Gregory Gregoriadis, George Poste, 2012-12-06 The success of vaccination in controlling infectious diseases is well documented However low profitability expense and liability have hindered research and development of vaccines Recently increasing realization enhanced by the AIDS pandemic of the need to overcome such difficulties has led to steps being taken by national authorities non profit and commercial organizations to resolve them This has been facilitated by developments in recombinant DNA techniques the advent of monoclonal anti bodies and progress in the understanding of the immunological structure of proteins which have laid the foundation of a new generation of vaccines Such vaccines are defined at the molecular level can elicit immune responses controlling infectious organisms and are therefore potentially free of the problems encountered in conventional ones Unfortunately subunit and synthetic peptide vaccines are often only weakly or non immunogenic However developments in both antigen production and immuno potentiation of weak antigens have opened new avenues with exciting prospects for vaccine design Vaccines Gregory Gregoriadis, Brenda McCormack, Anthony C. Allison, 2012-12-06 During the last decade or so vaccine development has been facilitated by rapid advances in molecular and cell biology These have laid the foundations of a new generation of vaccines exemplified by subunit vaccines produced through gene cloning and by synthetic peptides mimicking small regions of proteins on the outer coat of viruses Such peptide are capable of eliciting virus neutralizing antibodies Unfortunately subunit and peptide vaccines are only weakly or non immunogenic in the absence of immunological adjuvants that are known to augment specific cell mediated immune responses to the antigens and to promote the formation of protective antibodies This book contains the proceedings of the 4th NATO Advanced Studies Institute ASI Vaccines New Generation Immunological Adjuvants held at Cape Sounion Beach Greece during 24 June 5 July 1994 and deals in depth with both theoretical and practical aspects of vaccinology These include the role of antigen presenting cells in the induction of immune responses immunopotentiality by a variety of new generation immunological adjuvants and vaccine carriers and recent advances and perspectives in experimental vaccines as well as vaccination with nucleic acids We express our appreciation to Dr K Dalsgaard and Dr J L Virelizier for their cooperation in planning the ASI and to Mrs Concha Pening for her excellent production of the manuscripts The ASI was held under the sponsorship of NATO Scientific Affairs Division and generously co sponsored by SmithKline Beecham Pharmaceuticals Philadelphia Initial Core Descriptions Scripps Institution of Oceanography, Microbiomes of the Built Environment National Academies of Sciences, Engineering, and Medicine, National Academy of Engineering, Division on Engineering and Physical Sciences, Health and Medicine Division, Division on Earth and Life Studies, Board on Infrastructure and the Constructed Environment, Board on Environmental Studies and Toxicology, Board on Life Sciences, Committee on Microbiomes of the Built Environment: From Research to Application, 2017-10-06 People's desire to understand the environments in which they live is a natural one. People spend most of their time in spaces and structures designed, built, and managed by humans, and it is estimated that people in developed countries now spend 90 percent of their lives indoors. As people move from homes to workplaces, traveling in cars, and on transit systems, microorganisms are continually with and around them. The human-associated microbes that are shed along with the human behaviors that affect their transport and removal make significant contributions to the diversity of the indoor microbiome. The characteristics of healthy indoor environments cannot yet be defined, nor do microbial clinical and building researchers yet understand how to modify features of indoor environments such as building ventilation systems and the chemistry of building materials in ways that would have predictable impacts on microbial communities to promote health and prevent disease. The factors that affect the environments within buildings, the ways in which building characteristics influence the composition and function of indoor microbial communities, and the ways in which these microbial communities relate to human health and well-being are extraordinarily complex and can be explored only as a dynamic interconnected ecosystem by engaging the fields of microbial biology and ecology, chemistry, building science, and human physiology. This report reviews what is known about the intersection of these disciplines and how new tools may facilitate advances in understanding the ecosystem of built environments, indoor microbiomes, and effects on human health and well-being. It offers a research agenda to generate the information needed so that stakeholders with an interest in understanding the impacts of built environments will be able to make more informed decisions.
