

WHERE THERE'S SMOKE ...

GAIL BARRETT'S HEROES
BATTLE THE FLAMES

LET'S FACE IT, in the last couple of years, romance readers have had their fill of hero FBI agents and DEA agents, not to mention small-town police chiefs who suddenly find themselves thrust into the biggest case of their life. So it's no surprise that writers are looking for that still-unpopularized career for their heroes.

That was certainly the case for Gail Barrett, who was looking for a new career for her hero when she found a list highlighting "the 10 most exciting careers." The article had been sent to her by her husband, John Barrett, a retired U.S. Coast Guard officer. Though the Coast Guard was listed as a career option, it was another job that immediately had the author's antenna spiking — smokejumpers.

Smokejumpers are firefighters who leap out of airplanes to be the first line of defense in battling forest fires. Many smokejumpers are employees of the U.S. Forest Service and are stationed at a handful of bases, mostly in the West. Generally, they work from June to October.

"I was looking for a profession for the hero Wade Winslow, and I knew I needed someone who was very physically active and someone who would put himself at risk because of his backstory," explains Barrett. "I noticed smokejumpers on the list and thought it would work well in my story."

That story, Where He Belongs, is being released this month as a Silhouette Special Edition. And Barrett's debut already got some buzz thanks to its placement as the Golden Heart winner for Long Contemporary in 2004, the Romance Writers of America award for unpublished works.

The book features loner hero Wade, who returns to his hometown in western Maryland to deal with the estate left to him by his adoptive father and is reunited with his former love, Erin. Though Wade is on vacation during much of the book's narrative, his skills are called into action when a fire raging in the hilly forests nearby threatens his hometown.

To research her characters, Barrett spent time talking with real smokejumpers (mostly men, she says, because there are only a few women in the profession). Barrett even visited a smokejumper base in Montana, though she didn't get to ride in their airplane.

Barrett's next book, Facing the Fire, an April 2006 title from Silhouette Intimate Moments, will feature smokejumper Cade McKenzie, a good friend of Wade's. The book takes place amid a raging forest fire that has Cade and his ex-wife trapped. Hope they can jump their way out of that one! — Faygie Levy
