General Comments

There were 17 713 candidates. The mean mark was 13.20 and the standard deviation was 5.17.

When compared to the target accessibility of 25–80%, one item proved to be slightly more difficult and three items proved to be more difficult than anticipated. No items proved to be easier than expected.

All the items were within the scope of the syllabus.

The statistics for many of the items indicate that there was a considerable amount of guesswork on the part of many candidates. It is important to remember that a thorough knowledge of all topics on the syllabus is required in order to gain high marks on this paper.

Comments on specific items

Item 3

60% understood the double entry required to record the transaction. A lack of understanding of the different ledgers resulted in the key being selected by only 39%.

Item 5

This should have been a relatively straightforward item. It was expected that candidates would know that only cash discount is recorded in the cash book and that this is calculated on the price of the goods after the deduction of trade discount.
